Simmons in Retrospect

"Fun, challenging, great friendships, memories that will last forever . . . loved every minute!" "Four fun-filled years I'll never forget" "If I knew then what I know now . . ." "So many memories in a few short years and so little time to share the laughter and the tears. Thank you for being there: Lisa, Lynn, Colleen, Laurie, Bagel . . . Mom and Dad." "To Howard, my family, and my friends with real majors — thanks for your laughter, support, and love." "It's been real!" "Thanks for all the wonderful memories." "Many great friends were made here and many good times were had. These friends and memories I will have for a lifetime, hopefully!" "Under pressure" "Challenging and fun times with fellowship, field hockey and the P.T. dept." "The constancy of purpose is the secret to success." "I have never allowed my classes to stand in the way of my education" "I've had a great time meeting people from all walks of life." "It's a nice place, but I wouldn't want to live there." "As a transfer student, I have great respect for Simmons. It has taught me independence, true friendship, and high standards for my life." "I will always remember my friends here at Simmons and the 'crazy', fun times we had together!" "Bermuda College Week — 1982 . . . many good times with great people! A fine education." "Thanks to my friends and the city of Boston for making my college experience rewarding." "Commuting beats residing — except with Tobi, Excellent Education" "I like Simmons' practical approach to education, particularly in the Communications and Management departments." "Crew saved me from losing my sanity. Thanks to many friends from the classes of 1981, '82 and '83. Much love to Rickie Lee." "I will always value the friendships made and the time spent at Simmons College; I entered as a girl and will be leaving as a woman." "Fun, Educational"

Jetliner Tragedy Leaves 269 Dead, World Outraged

Tragedy occurred early in our first semester of senior year, when a South Korean jumbo jetliner carrying 269 innocent citizens was fired upon and destroyed by Soviet forces who claimed the plane was invading their air space.

As the lost 747 jet, en route from Anchorage to Seoul, traveled to its destination, it was tracked by Soviet forces and followed by a fighter pilot for 14 minutes. Reports show evidence indicating the Soviets had full knowledge that they were destroying a civilian commercial aircraft.

President Reagan charged Moscow with a "barbaric act" and replied to Russian claims of innocence by demanding, "What can be said about Soviet credibility when they so flagrantly lie about such a heinous act?"

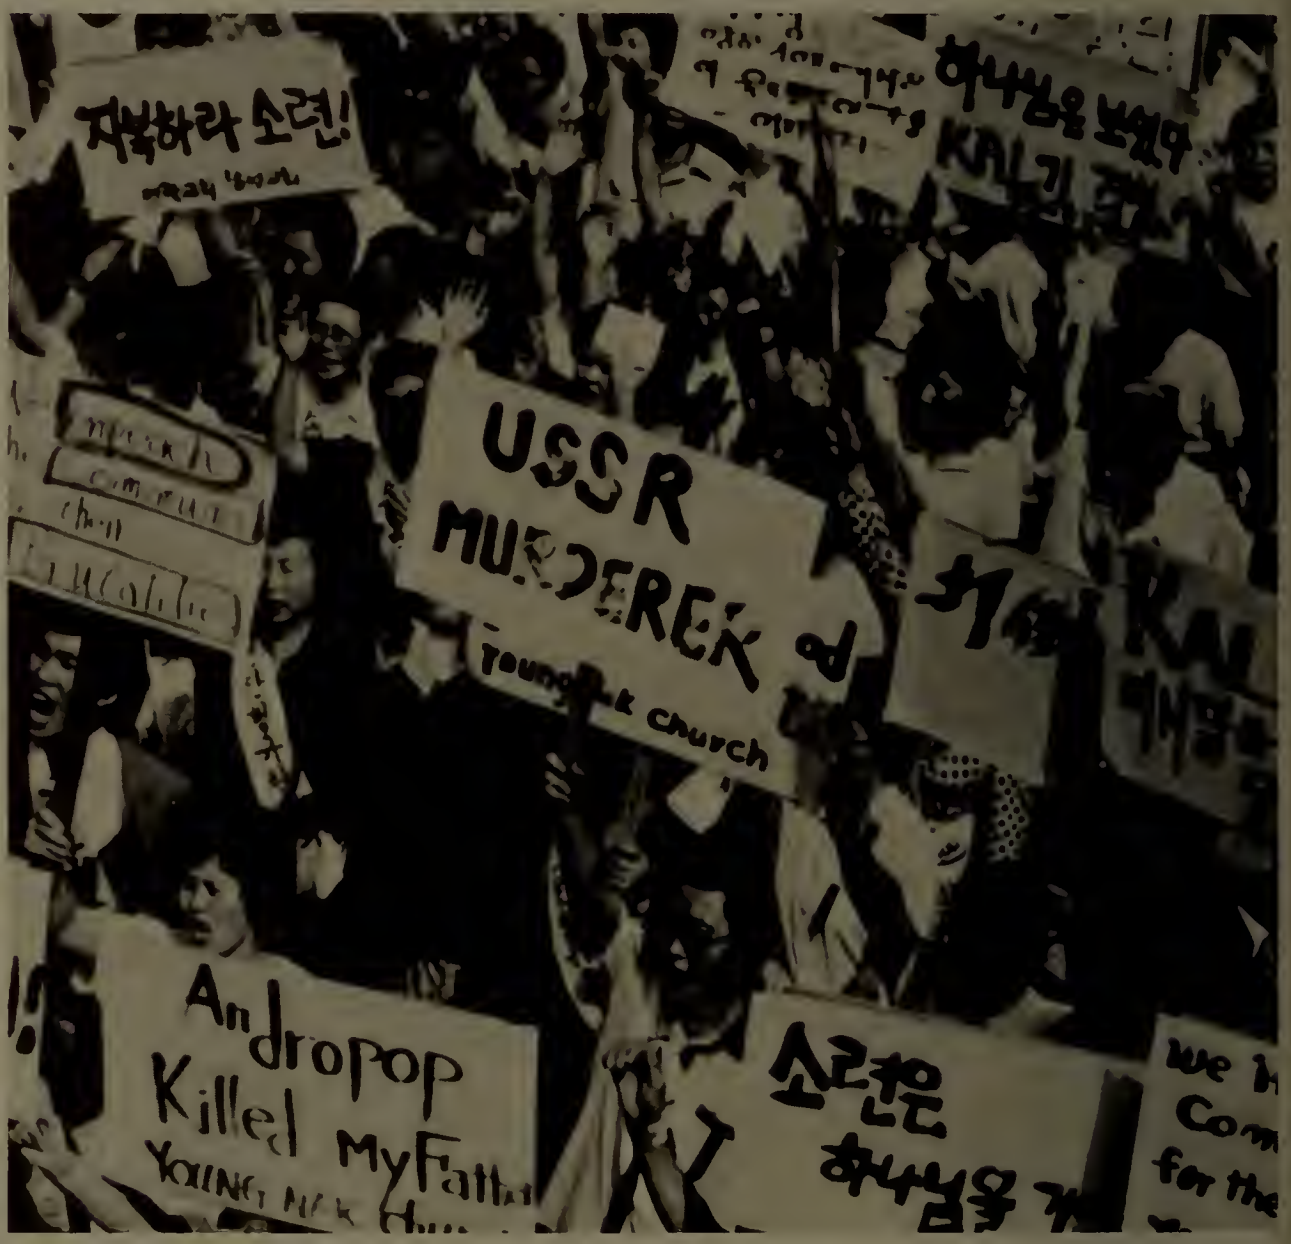
Besides denying the charges, Soviet officials went one step further and accused the U.S. of implanting spy equipment on the plane and masquerading it within a civilian aircraft. There is no evidence that Korean Air Lines Flight 007 was anything but a normal passenger run that somehow went wrong.

The crises began as routine: the flight's regular 11:50 pm departure from New York's Kennedy International Airport. The Boeing 747 boarded 73 Koreans, at least 39 Americans, 28 Japanese and smaller groups of passengers from at least nine other countries. One late booking went to U.S. Rep. Lawrence McDonald, Democrat of Georgia, the ultraconservative lawmaker and chairman of flight. McDonald had just missed the earlier flight.

Flight 007 had some kind of trouble. In his last talk with Tokyo, Captain Chon gave Flight 007's position as 113 miles southeast of the island Hokkaido; but Tokyo radar showed the plane 113 miles north of Hokkaido, the John Birch Society. McDonald was flying to Seoul for ceremonies marking the 30th anniversary of the U.S. — Korean mutual defense treaty. He was to join other U.S. Representatives who had taken an earlier heading toward Sakhalin, a Soviet island. One mystery is why Japanese controllers apparently did not steer him back on course.

Another question was how the Captain could have gotten lost in the first place. With the sophistication of the Boeing navigational systems; technical failure, such as radio or radar breakdown, is highly unlikely.

Meanwhile, at an airport in Seoul, friends and relatives waited for the plane that was "running late." When news of the disaster broke, South Koreans, Japanese, Americans, and the rest of the free world turned to the Soviets demanding an explanation, apologies, and compensation for families of victims. To this day, they have received none of the above.



SEOUL, SOUTH KOREA — Carrying placards some 5,000 Korean Christians gathered at Seoul's Youngnak Church for an anti-Soviet rally to protest the shooting down of the Korean Air Lines jetliner with 269 people killed. 9/6/83.

Free in Space

Astronauts Bruce McCandless and Robert Stewart unhooked lifelines on February 7 and became the first humans to fly free in space.

They used a gas-powered jet-pack to propel themselves more than 300 feet from the shuttle Challenger.

Both men and shuttle were streaking along at 17,400 mph, but in airless, boundless space, there was no sensation of such speed.

The jet-packs will allow untethered astronauts to retrieve and repair satellites in flight. NASA spent $10 million on their premiere jet-pack.

McCandless, a 46-year-old ex-Navy aviator, was 165 miles over Hawaii when he began his historic walk about 8:10 am EST. Stewart's walk began about two hours later.

Challenger touched down at The Kennedy Space Center in Cape Canaveral, Florida, with a perfect landing on February 11. The mission was hailed a complete success.

Tsongas Says Goodbye to Senate

Massachusetts Senator Paul E. Tsongas bid a sad farewell to politics during mid-January, announcing that he would not seek re-election due to a "chronic illness."

That illness was reported several days later to be a mild form of lymph-node cancer. Doctors reportedly told Tsongas that the illness itself would not prevent him from serving a second six-year term, but Tsongas cited his family obligations as his deepest responsibility.

Tsongas, his wife and three daughters are residents of Lowell, where Tsongas began his political career. He served as a city councilman, a county commissioner, won a House seat in 1974, and defeated former Republican Senator Edward W. Brooke in 1978.

James Watt Resigns as Interior Chief

If you strive to please some of the people some of the time, then by pleasing all of the people none of the time, James Watt outdid himself in 1983.

By one unscientific estimate, the former secretary of the interior managed to offend roughly 85 percent of the American public over his two-and-a-half year span in office. He was quoted as describing Indian reservations as "an example of the failure of socialism," termed Beach Boy fans drug and alcohol abusers, named liberals "un-American" and referred to supporters of pro-choice as forces similar to those which created the Holocaust.

Watt was most infamous for a later statement however, in which he described the members of his newly-formed coal-lease commission.

"We have every kind of mix you can have," he said proudly. ". . . a black . . . a woman, two Jews and a cripple. And we have talent."

The remark spurred public outcry for Watt to vacate his position in the Reagan administration. Formal apologies had been sufficient in Watt's earlier verbal blunders, but this time Republican lawmakers feared the impact of Watt on the Reagan administration and reelection campaign and the Republican party as a whole.

No one was surprised when Watt left his position of interior secretary several October days later. The shock came when Reagan announced that he planned to nominate national-security advisor William P. Clark to the post. Not only did this leave an urgent vacancy on the National Security Council, but it left environmentalists wondering out loud. What experience in environmental issues could Clark claim? Many wilderness club leaders said they doubted if Clark could even name the most famous national parks and environmental societies.

Clark did assume the position however, and was replaced by Robert C. McFarlane, a former deputy national security advisor and Middle East envoyTurned
Professor

Robert E. White assumed the Warburg Chair as Professor of International Relations at Simmons in September of 1983.

White, who specializes in Central and South American matters, taught the course Central America and the United States.

During his twenty-five years in the Foreign Service, White served as Director of Peace Corps activity of Central America and U.S. Ambassador to Paraguay from 1977 to 1979. His most recent Foreign Service position was U.S. Ambassador of El Salvador where he served from 1979 up until he was dismissed from his post under the Reagan Administration in February, 1981.

NEWPORT, R.I., SEPT. 26 — The Australian 12-meter yacht Australia II, (KA6), leads U.S. Liberty in the fifth leg of the 25th America's Cup, enroute to the first ever foreign in the 132-year-old event.

Australia II Wins in Newport

A 132-year winning streak came to an end late September when the Australia II defeated the Liberty in the greatest challenge in the history of the America's Cup.

The new fastest 12-meter yacht in the world held a total winning margin nearly five minutes faster than Liberty, despite the fact that Australia II was defeated in the first two of seven races.

The victory of the cup means the site of the 1984 race will be switched from the traditional Newport, Rhode Island finishline to foreign waters and winds of Australia. It also means the ancient cup was removed from a pedestal at the New York Yacht Club and sent to a new resting ground in Australia, at least until next year.

Journalist Offers Answers to Diplomatic Questions

By Susan Horowitz

Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist, Seymour Hersh spoke at Simmons on November 15 about "The Price of Power: Journalism and the Foreign Policy," telling the audience that the United States had been "fighting immorality with immorality," and that perhaps the people of this country should demand to know more about the character of their leaders.

Hersh, who has won more than a dozen major journalism prizes, including the Pulitzer, for among other things, his uncovering of the My Lai Massacre, kicked off this year's Lowell Lecture series speaking to a capacity crowd at Simmons.

Speaking in the wake of the bombing in Beirut and the invasion of Grenada, Hersh said the bottom line for him was morality.

According to Hersh, this morality is closely linked with the power of the presidency, particularly in instances of foreign policy. The president has two divine rights in foreign policy. "1) The power to unilaterally order American men into combat around the world and put them in situations where they're exposed to hostile fire without appropriate consultation with Congress or the people, and 2) he (the President) has the right to lie to the American people and the press about it," Hersh said.

Applying these divine rights to concrete situations, Hersh took the audience through much of the Watergate scandal pointing out several cover-ups and gaps between events and public's knowledge of these events. These rights, however, are not exclusive to any single president, according to Hersh.

In the case of the Grenada incident, Hersh said that there is still no real answer as to why Reagan went into Granada. It had nothing really to do with the students, and there is no real evidence that the Cubans or the Soviets would have any reason to leave a protective defensible base in Cuba and go 300 or 400 miles away to an undefensible position, he said.

One of the problems with winning a war such as Grenada is that the victor has to occupy that country, Hersh said. "We're fighting immorality with immorality. How important is it? Perhaps we should turn a blind eye to some of these things; after all, ask not what the country can do for you, etcetera, etcetera," Hersh said.

Hersh told the audience that this immorality extends into Central America as well. "We're in very deep in Central America. If I were writing for the New York Times, I know that I'd be writing that he (Reagan) had decided to go to war (Central America) in February 1983," Hersh said. The issue for Reagan is not the political cost, according to Hersh. Instead, Reagan thinks this is the legacy he must leave: not to have a communist state existing in Central America.

Hersh insists that this country is getting itself in deeper and deeper because now we all live with the threat of nuclear war. According to Hersh, it's no longer a question of when, but a question of what will happen when it's over; will anyone be left?

Deployment of the Pershing II and Cruise missiles in West Germany had only heightened the situation. According to Hersh, the deployment has quickened our attack time to much of the Soviet Union to 3 to 5 minutes. Soviet response will be predictable, according to Hersh. They will move their submarines just outside of New York and New Hampshire and Savannah and San Francisco said Hersh.

All of this is coming at a time when relations between the United States and the Soviet Union are at a low. "And all of this progress is in the name of the policy of fighting immorality with immorality," Hersh said.

In the midst of all this turmoil is the press, according to Hersh. Often the American public looks to the press to expose the truths, and the Watergate scandal helped to encourage the notion of the almighty press. But a lot of the information the press gets is after the fact. According to Hersh, the American public did not learn about the B52 bombing of Cambodia, or the wire tappings or the CIA in Chile or the CIS's domestic spying until after the 1972 elections.

Therefore, said Hersh, an argument can be made against the press because by failing to penetrate the White House, the press may in some way have made Watergate possible because it gave Nixon the thought that he had a free rein. Nixon, for example, burned the White House tapes because there was no one to stop him, no one to make him accountable for his actions, according to Hersh.

In defense of the press, Hersh said that the truth in this society is that the press is not to blame because there is no way to defeat the power of the presidency. "The president has the power to lie to us and get away with it," said Hersh.

Hersh told the audience that "at the minimum, we ought to demand to know more about the character of the men we elect, because it's so clear that we relegate to them so much power and so much responsibility that the only restraints are going to be internal."

Ma Bell Splits Up

Surely breaking up is hard to do, but American Telephone and Telegraph (AT&T) managed to drag us all into the act when the 107-year- old monopoly split on January 1.

The split allowed competitors such as MCI and SPRINT to cash in on America's tendency to reach out and touch someone. Ironically, even baby bell companies created by MA Bell could now profit from former customers of AT&T.

The breakup was confusing, but customers had basically three options. They could continue to rent their phones from AT&T, buy the phones they had been using, or turn them in and buy new ones from different telephone companies, department stores or service centers. Simmons opted to replace the black CENTREX model with sleek new touch tone phones that will be installed campus-wide during the summer of '84.

CHARLESTON, S.C., OCT. 26 — A KISS — An evacuee of Grenada pauses to kiss the ground after landing at the Charleston Air Force Base. Many medical students from the United States, were flown to safety after the U.S. troops invaded the island.

The tiny island of Grenada was overcome with turmoil when Prime Minister Maurice Bishop, a protege of Cuba's Fidel Castro, was slain along with cabinet members and many civilians on October 19.

The bloodshed prompted President Reagan to dispatch a U.S. Naval task force consisting of 2,000 Marines. The official purpose was to ensure the safety of 1,000 Americans, most of them medical students, who were trapped on the island.

Many politicians speculated however that Reagan was primarily interested in flexing his military strength to overcome the island through an offensive attack.

In response to this accusation, Reagan stressed the importance of the Americans' safety, citing the situation as a potential hostage crisis such as the seizing of the U.S. Embassy in Iran.

The invasion ended the Cuban presence on Grenada and took out of commission a controversial airfield that the U.S. believed would have allowed Havana and Moscow to extend their power in the Caribbean and Central America.

After evacuating the Americans, Reagan told a nationwide television audience on October 27 that the invasion conquered a Cuban plot to occupy the island.

Reagan was quoted as saying, "We have discovered a complete base with weapons and communications equipment which makes it clear a Cuban occupation of the island had been planned." Six hundred Cubans had been taken prisoner in the invasion, Reagan added.

Reporters were not permitted to accompany U.S. forces to Grenada, and those already there were ordered out. Journalists were allowed on the island only on the third day.

U.S. forces overran a Cuban military facility, capturing a Cuban colonel along with the large amount of arms, communications gear and secret papers.

At least 11 U.S. servicemen were killed in the invasion and 67 wounded. Seven were missing. A dozen Cubans and a number of Grenadian civilians also died. The captured Cubans were sent back to Havana.

The Reagan administration has charged that Havana had ambitions to turn Grenada into a puppet state, from which it could export Communist revolutions to other Caribbean islands.

Nearly four months later, a nonelected interim government is running the island on a "caretaker" basis. Hopefully elections that would install permanent leaders will be held soon, and democracy will begin to unfold.

After "The Day After"

Never in 1983, or possibly in the last decade, has there been a movie that stirred so much fervor even before arriving on the airwaves as "The Day After." Filmed and based primarily on a typical American setting; college students, farmers and everyday middle class residents of Lawrence, Kansas, go about their business believing the "unthinkable" nuclear devastation can never occur. Even when Lawrence newscasters announce the invasion of West Germany by the Soviet Union, Americans refuse to acknowledge that the "impossible" may soon become a thermonuclear reality.

Of course the nuclear weapons are launched, and as estimated 100 million Americans watched, mass vaporizations, building explosions, fires, death, destruction beyond repair ensues. Also documented in "The Day After" were the unpleasant symptoms of radiation sickness, and the futile attempt by surviving townspeople to rebuild their community and return to a pre-Armageddon standard of living.

Opponents of nuclear-freeze termed the film a propaganda tactic by antinuclear advocates attempting to attract funding and more participation to their campaign.

Supporters of nuclear-freeze called "The Day After" a positive message of reality which would convince viewers of the need to actively respond to the government's build-up of nuclear weapons in this country and abroad.

To help audiences deal with the emotional "fallout" after "The Day After," ABC held a special edition of Ted Koppel's "Nightline" with debate on all sides of issues raised in the film. Featured panel speakers were Carl Sagan, Henry Kissenger, Robert McNamara and William F. Buckley, Jr. The discussion was preceded by an address to the nation by Secretary of State George Shultz, who reconfirmed the commitment of the United States government to prevent such a nuclear holocaust from ever occurring. Three days later on November 23 however, the Soviet Union walked out of the Geneva arms talks, vowing to deploy a new array of intermediate-range missiles in response to the NATO deployment of cruise and Pershing II missiles in Western Europe. Viewers were also informed that actual damage resulting from a full nuclear strike against the United States would most likely be far greater than the events depicted in the film.

Thinking the "Unthinkable"

No, nuclear war does not top the list of the ten best dinner topics, but the issue is an important and crucial one; and something we began to think about a little bit more during our first semester senior year.

How could we not think about it; pictures of West German demonstrators adorned magazine covers, "The Day After" brought nuclear annihilation right into our living rooms, NATO began to deploy 572 Pershin II and cruise missiles in Europe, and the Soviet Union walked out of the Geneva arms talks threatening to field even more missiles than before.

The Soviet Union refused to remove its SS-20s from East Germany, and even indicated that deployment of more missiles would occur to combat the "threat" of the increasing number of American missiles in West Germany.

Public opinion in Western Europe generally opposes deployment. A number of demonstrations, candlelight vigils, speeches and marches took place while the missiles were brought into West Germany, yet missile deployment was approved by the West German parliament.

An American consensus of public sentiment is that nuclear weapons do double duty; they threaten the world and also keep the peace. Effective deterrence requires stability — a carefully maintained balance of terror.

Andropov Dies, New Soviet Leader Chosen

Soviet Union President Yuri Andropov died February 9 at the age of 69 as a result of kidney failure, diabetes, and a long history of various medical problems.

The new Kremlin leader, Konstantin Chernenko, 72, was selected by the Central Committee several days later. He had been a member of the Central Committee since 1976 and was named to full Politburo membership in 1978. He was a close associate of former Soviet president Leonid Brezhnev.

Since the day he took over as General Secretary of the Soviet Communist Party on November 12, 1982, Yuri Andropov carried a burden that would not go away — his poor health.

Andropov assumed the presidency on June 16, two days after the death of Leonid Brezhnev. He had not been seen in public since August 18, when he met with a group of U.S. senators in Russia. He was reported to be suffering from ailments including Parkinson's disease, degeneration of the kidney and diabetes.

The lack of a visible Soviet leader made negotiations and interpretations of Soviet policy even more tense than usual. Dealings with Communist neighbors from Poland to China were mired in suspicion and hostility. Earlier in 1983, the Soviet Army was bogged down in Afghanistan with no hope of an early withdrawal. The world scorned the Soviet Union after the South Korean airliner was shot down on September 1.

Foreign policy problems between the Soviet Union and the United States increased even more when the Soviet Union walked out of the Geneva arms talks in late November. The Soviet government vowed to deploy a new array of intermediate-range nuclear missiles in response to the NATO deployment of cruise and Pershing II missiles in Western Europe. As seen from the Kremlin, the NATO missiles were not, as the White House claims, intended to correct a nuclear imbalance. Rather, they were viewed as concrete evidence of the Reagan administration's desire to overcome the Soviet Union's superpower standing.

Within Russia, lifestyles have seen little change from the days of Brezhnev to the Politburo of Andropov. A rare and disturbing exception is the sharp decline of Jewish, German and Armenian emigration. In 1979, Jewish emigration peaked at 51,320; it totaled only 1,800 in 1983. At least 9,000 Jews have had their requests to leave the Soviet Union turned down, compared to one-third that number in 1979.

With the Soviet Union away from the negotiating table, the future of nuclear arms policy making, use and misuse remains in jeopardy. President Reagan did not attend the funeral, but in a statement read by his representative Vice Presdident George Bush, Reagan expressed willingness to meet with the new Soviet leader to discuss arms control issues.

WASHINGTON, D.C., NOV. 14 — Little Lee Woo, age 4, yawns after the long trip from Korea on Air Force One, with 7-year-old Ahn Gi Sook as they stand with President and Mrs. Ronald Reagan. The children were brought here by Mrs. Reagan for heart surgery.

Ray Flynn Gets in

Our senior year was a time for change, and one of the more visible changes was the departure of former Boston mayor Kevin White and the election of his successor, Raymond Flynn.

Sixteen years is a long time in public office, so when White announced that he would not seek another term, nine candidates scrambled to be listed on the primary ticket.

In the end, it was King vs. Flynn in a political showdown that casted Boston into the national political limelight. King, with his rainbow coalition, was the first black in Boston history who qualified for the runoff election.

Both candidates campaigned for and supported similar issues. During the much-publicized debates, they stressed the need for more jobs, better public housing for the poor and the need to make downtown developers contribute more to the refurbishing of the city's decaying residential neighborhoods. Mayor White had concentrated on a buildup of Boston's business district during his years in office.

The first televised debate among eight of the nine candidates was held at Simmons in April of 1983. Of the mayoral candidates Larry DiCara, David Finnegan, Ray Flynn, Dennis Kearney, Robert Kiley, and Eloise Linger, Finnegan seemed to have the early edge. Michael Gilbert, representing the Libertarian Party, did not attend.

When the polls finally closed on November 11 however, Raymond Flynn was the new mayor of Boston.

Laura Returns to G.H.

In 1983, Laura (Genie Francis) returned to Luke (Tony Geary), Port Charles and General Hospital after a two year disappearance.

Upon her return, Laura revealed that she had been kidnapped by the treacherous Cassadine family and forced to marry the evil Stavros Cassadine. She managed to escape from the island on which she was held against her will, to arrive home to her beloved Port Charles.

Laura discovered that Luke had just been voted the mayor of Port Charles and following a tear-filled reunion with all of her family and friends, she took on the duties and responsibilities of Port Charles' first lady.

Will Luke and Laura find their dream? Will they EVER return to Port Charles?

There's a New Place in Town!

Boston met Dallas when Copley Place, featuring the newest branch of the Neiman-Marcus retailing chain, opened on February 13.

Neiman-Marcus offers such features as exclusive designer lines, personal shopping services for the busy professional, and of course unusual gifts for the person who's hard to buy for. Take for example, gold plated bathtubs, fish tanks floored with precious gems, or a picnic package, consisting of a wicker basket with crystal and china and a 1930s MG Midget to drive around in, a bargain at $32,500.

After breaking in our Neiman-Marcus charge cards, 79 shops remained in Copley Place yet to explore. Of course you could see mall regulars such as The Limited and Casual Corner, but now such names as Alfred Sung, Louis Vuitton, Gucci and Godiva joined the ranks of Boston retailers.

Serious shopping is hard work, and for those in search of a late afternoon lunch or candlelit dinner, Copley Place offers several options. Arne's Seafood Restaurant and Cafe, Durgin Park and the Commons boasted a variety in menu, atmosphere, and prices.

And for those of us who still try to have a good night out on five dollars, SACK theatres opened nine cinema complexes, one to feature the special "Where's Boston?" video. Perhaps college students will be able to afford Copley Place after all.

Heart to Heart

Massachusetts took another giant step forward in medicine during February, when a South Hadley pharmacist underwent New England's first heart transplant on February 2.

Gerald P. Boucher, 43, received his new heart at Brigham and Women's Hospital. The donor was a 38-year-old Connecticut nurse who was killed in an automobile accident.

Eight days later, a second heart transplant took place at Brigham and Women's, but this time the recipient was a 16-year-old boy. Matthew V. Shelales of Bolton received his heart from a 41-year-old woman from the Worcester area.

Heart transplants could not be performed previously in New England because Blue Cross-Blue Shield had refused to cover the cost. That decision was reversed on February 1.

Carl Yastrzemski

Yaz Steps to Bat One Last Time . . .

Yaz spent all of his 23 baseball seasons playing for the Red Sox. Throughout his career he was a member of the 1967 "Impossible Dream Team," 1975 World Series games, and near-playoff contention in 1978.

Yaz is one of the few baseball players of all time to reach the plateau of 400 homeruns and 3,000 hits. He won the Triple Crown and several Gold Glove Awards. Carl Michael Yastrzemski is surely a future baseball hall of famer.

During a standing ovation and cheers from his fans, Yaz reciprocated the appreciation by trotting the perimeter of Fenway, waving his baseball cap and reaching out to touch the many hands that were extended to him.

In his farewell speech, Yaz, with a quiver in his voice, said, "This is a special day for me. I am extremely honored that so many of you came here to share this day with me.

One thing that I've learned over the years is that Red Sox fans are the greatest and most loyal . . . The spirit of this great ballclub makes it the best place to play baseball in the world . . . I will miss you. I will miss my teammates past and present, the clubhouse people, the batboys and all the terrific people who work at Fenway Park . . . Again, thank you so much and I hope I represented Boston and New England with class and dignity. New England, I love you."

Have You Hugged Your Cabbage Kid Today?

Some say they're ugly, while others flocked from near and far to adopt "the kids." For whatever reason, Cabbage Patch dolls were the epitome of gift giving this Christmas, complete with adoption papers, birth certificates, and a name provided by Coleco.

And if you decided to pamper the little dears, accessories such as knee socks, lunch boxes, tote bags, sheets, pajamas, jewelry and bicycles were also available. Heaven forbid the Cabbage Patch kid next door should acquire all these possessions without yours having the same.

Coleco, who preferred to be known as the "kid adoption agency," attributed the success of the dolls to their uniqueness. All the dolls vary in hair, skin color, mouth shape, type of clothing, position of dimples, and gender. Former fads such as pet rocks, hula hoops, slinky and silly putty were certainly not as intricate and elaborate as the dolls, but neither were their price tags.

While the retail "adoption" price started at $25, black market kids could be purchased from anywhere between $150 and $300. One Kansas City father flew to London to assure his five-year-old daughter of having a doll on Christmas morning. Radio stations jokingly announced doll giveaways, only to be bombarded by hoards of eager foster parents with the most serious of intentions.

Between Thanksgiving and Christmas of 1983, Coleco easily parted with 2.5 million of vegetable-based happy-home hunters. Ironically, this number is much higher than the birth and real adoption rate combined for that time period.

Hamel Urges Women to Look Within for Models

by Susan Horowitz

Actress Veronica Hamel spoke at Simmons on December 5, about celebrity, life choices and role models, telling the audience, "Be your own role model, your own counsel. Look in the mirror, you're it. And you can take bits and pieces from other people — but many people. Have a banquet with people you admire. It's all a stew, make it a really terrific one. It's really tasty, have lots of stuff in it."

Hamel began her acting career in New York, appearing in several stage productions before moving to Hollywood. Hamel turned down what became Jaclyn Smith's role in Charlie's Angels, because she feared being stuck in one role. She opted instead to do the rounds on several television series and appeared in episodes of Dallas, Family, The Bob Newhart Show, and Kojak. Hamel has been nominated three times for an Emmy Award as Outstanding Lead Actress in a Drama Series for her role as Joyce Davenport in Hill Street Blues.

In a press conference before the lecture, Hamel discussed her career, her feelings about lecturing and what it means to be a woman in a male-dominated industry.

Hamel told the press that Hill Street has turned into one of her best experiences in the medium. After reading the script, which she thought was brilliantly written, she accepted the part, never thinking the concept would catch. "I was too naive to know it was going to be such a success," Hamel said.

Hamel focused her lecture on role models. The role of Joyce Davenport has forced a certain responsibility on Hamel because Davenport "is much admired and talked about." Letters from a great cross-section of people are sent to Hamel seeking advice on career choices, asking questions about the legal field, or just addressing the encouragement that Joyce Davenport offers them.

Recognition is something Hamel tries to separate from her private life. "Recognition has affected my life as a whole, but not really the thing very dear to me. I've kept that separate and always will if I can," she said.

Another Way to Have Heart

The most dramatic surgical event of 1982 and 1983 took place early on Thursday morning, December 2, 1982. Surgeons at the University of Utah Medical Center cut out most of the natural heart of 61-year-old dentist Barney B. Clark and replaced it with a 10-ounce artificial heart.

This was the first time that a permanent artificial heart had been implanted in a human being as a replacement for a permanently damaged or dying heart.

Clark was quoted in February as saying that the discomfort of the operation and the encumbrance of his adjoining life supply pumps was preferable to being dead or too sick to put on his own pants.

Clark died on March 23, 112 days after the surgery, as a result of the massive failure of all organs, except the aritifical heart. It continued to pump blood even after Clark was declared dead.

Presidential Primary Profiles

As of January, the leader of the pack was former vice president Walter Mondale. Mondale got an early start on the campaign trail, and was soon backed by endorsements from the major labor unions, high ranking government officials, and a variety of special interest groups. His campaign was by far the most organized, professional, and affluent.

Former astronaut and Ohio Senator John Glenn ran a close second. Many democrats admitted that although Mondale may be the choice of the party, Glenn may be the strongest candidate against Ronald Reagan. The release of "The Right Stuff," depicting Glenn's flight to the moon certainly did not hurt his hero image. Glenn represented middle of the road, pragmatic politics; a moderate alternative to the liberal views of Mondale.

Colorado Senator Gary Hart stressed a new generation of leadership within the Democratic party. At 48, he is one of the youngest contenders for the nomination. He spoke of "new issues" such as energy and the environment, and has gathered the largest support of college students for any candidate. Heavily in debt however, Hart has been forced to do most of his campaigning from the Senate floor.

The most flamboyant of the candidates seemed to be the Rev. Jesse Jackson, 42, of Chicago. Jackson has promised to help elect more minorities and women to the House of Representatives and the Senate, increase minority hiring and apprentice programs within organized labor, and to achieve parity in officeholding equal to the proportion of blacks in the electorate. In the most dramatic episode of his campaign thus far, Jackson traveled to Syria and did what many politicians had deemed impossible; returned with Navy Lieutenant Robert Goodman who had been held prisoner a month in a Syrian jail. The diplomatic move earned political points for Jackson and eased tensions between the U.S. and Syria.

Former Florida Governor Reubin Askew is the most conservative of the candidates, and also one of the darkest horses in the political race. His views offered contrasting positions to standard Democratic answers on abortion, trade, the nuclear freeze, grain embargoes, labor laws and immigration reform. He will likely receive the full support of his home state, but political experts doubt whether support will come from other groups and states as well.

Another "let's wait and see" contender is 61-year-old Senator Ernest Hollings from South Carolina. Hollings is another conservative democrat, who planned to balance the federal budget by freezing spending across the board. Hollings also favored eliminating the MX missile and B-1 bomber in favor of pay raises for teachers and financial boosts for public education.

And then there's Alan Cranston, the liberal democrat from California. He favors job training bills, but campaigns predominantly for the issue of immediate negotiations with the Soviets for a nuclear freeze. His popularity peaked during the airing of ABC movie "The Day After" in November.

Massachusetts was the only state to vote for McGovern when he ran for the presidency in 1972 against Richard Nixon. He's back again this election, but minus the political steam and funding to effectively challenge frontrunners Mondale and Glen. McGovern supported immediate U.S. withdrawal from Lebanon and a 25 percent cut in defense spending. Above all else, he encouraged the Democratic Party to not divide within itself, but to reach agreement on the issues and sprout a candidate capable of beating Ronald Reagan.

Marines Ambushed — Remain in Lebanon

While U.S. Marines on a peacekeeping mission in Beirut slept, a truck approached the gate of Beirut International Airport. Within seconds, the TNT loaded vehicle had blasted through the gate and exploded in the barracks; Islamic terrorists who took responsibility for the suicide mission were elated, 239 American servicemen were dead.

A second terrorist bombing, coming seconds after the first, killed 21 French soldiers and left 37 missing at the barracks of the French peacekeeping forces three miles from the American compound.

The massacre occurred on Sunday morning, October 23, at 6:20 am. Since most of the victims were asleep and not wearing their dogtags, identification of bodies was slow. Personnel files were also destroyed in the explosion, making the process even more complicated.

A previously unknown group called the Islamic Revolutionary Movement claimed responsibility for the blasts a few hours after the bombings. President Reagan however, said their terrorist actions would not dictate American foreign policy in the Middle East.

Parents of marines and liberal politicians urged Reagan to pull the Marines out of Lebanon. Others suggested that the forces remain, but with tighter security checks than before. In the end, the Marines remained in Lebanon, and are still remaining to preserve the peace today.

BEIRUT, LEBANON, APRIL 19 — An American Flag and a U.S. Marine standby as rescue workers sort through the ruins of the American Embassy in Beirut, after being hit by a terrorist bomb, killing many and wounding over one hundred.

BEIRUT, LEBANON — Rescuers prepare to lower a U.S. Marine on a stretcher to safety after being trapped in the wreckage of the U.S. Command Post. Terrorists used a dynamite laden vehicle to blow up the building in which hundreds died in the blast, Oct. 23.

Joyce Kulhawik, WBZ-TV arts critic and a star graduate of the English Department, returned to Simmons during October of '83.

Award-winning journalist Seymour Hersh spoke to the college during the fall of '83 on journalism ethics and foreign policy issues.

Veronica Hamel, who plays character Joyce Davenport on the T.V. series "Hill Street Blues," visited Simmons in November '83.

This was the year that:

— Gardner House was closed to resident students
— Weekly movies, thanks to the Activities Programming Board, became a reality
— Computers invaded the campus, both in Bartol and the Library.
— All craters in the quad were finally filled in — Accounting became a major
— A formal sexual harassment policy was issued by the College
— A Dean's list, cumulative averages, and plus/minus grades were introduced
— Greyhound strikers made bussing home for Thanksgiving break a less than thankful experience
— Thousands of viewers watched the last episode of M*A*S*H*
— The Simmons Janus celebrated its 60th anniversary
— Alice Walker won the Pulitzer Prize in Literature for her novel "The Color Purple."
— Samantha Smith visited her pen pal, Yuri Andropov, in the Soviet Union
— Barbara McClintock of Maine became the first woman recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize
— We finally graduated!

Simmons in Retrospect

"Worked hard and ready to move on up!" "Roommates — Lauren, Siobhan, Claudia and Andrea" "Growing up and becoming a woman. Four years of excruciating pain and extreme happiness. Simmons will be highly recommended to anyone and everyone by me. It is a once in a lifetime experience" "And it's to end with the pressure of daily normal life continuing — And there are to be millions of ideas but no preaching — history, politics, feminism, art literature — in short a summing up of all, I know, feel, laugh at, despise, like, admire, hate and so on." "I love Simmons, it has helped me to make all the right choices about my future." "I will always treasure my years at Simmons. The friends made and the knowledge learned has made the college career at Simmons most valued." "ASA . . . 8:30 a.m. classes . . . North Hall . . . weekends — Thanks for the memories!" "I've made it through the rain!!! It looks like it's over, I never thought I would make it." "Being a Simmons student has been a wonderful experience. The things that are important in a college career are receiving a great education, being semi-independent, developing close long-lasting relationships, and learning more about yourself. I have successfully accomplished these goals and am proud to say that I was here at Simmons doing them." "Simmons is an unforgettable experience. Four years has gone by quite fast. Time does fly when you are having fun; going to classes, crewing, working, and living in a community situation" "Freshman year — no, Fresh*women,* Fourth floor Smith, Joes, living in the Janus office, growing up and learning about myself, B.D., I'll always remember." "Simmons has been an extremely positive experience. My best words of advice are: What you get out of anything depends on knowing what you really want and what you are willing to put in. Strive, persevere, endure, and you will fly. SALUD!" "Jeet, Brett" "It's been real — I did have fun!! I wouldn't have missed it." "Good school, fun people, hard work, — great times!!" "It's been a learning experience . . . socially and academically" "Simmons has a lot to offer if one has the time to give. Simmons is unique and special" "Memories of the times shared here will always be with us." "It's been one helluva great time!" "Happiness is like a butterfly, the more you chase it the more it will elude." "Activities Programming Board, Simmons Politics" "Great memories. Good times. Thanks for everything Mom and Dad. And Bill, of course." "If I had to do it again, I couldn't have picked a better place." "Making it to the next day" "Spring Vacation 1983 in Florida with Ange, Andy, Carol and Liz, and don't forget Paul and Steve" "Simmons has given me a valuable learning experience, both in and out of the classroom." "Ring by spring" "Rewarding and frustrating, exciting, lasting friendships, a time in my life I will never forget." "They say that college is just one of the many stops along the way, we'll see you at the next stop Syb, C.C., Candyce, Chelle and Helena." "Lots of hard work. Christian fellowship, good times with my friends and, of course, Tom." "My "engagement" to Paul" "See you in Detroit, See you in Philly" "Third floor Evans Tammy and Liz" "Simmons has been a positive experience for me all around. I have learned more about myself, both good and bad, and I have met more interesting people both in school and in Boston. I couldn't have asked for more." "Andy proofing all of my papers" "To do your best is all that you can do. An opportunity for lasting friendships, and a good education. Thanks Mom and Dad." "Monday nights at the Cask, looking for a good bar, Ta Chien's, good times and good friends, Thanks Mom, Dad and Mike, Thanksgivings in New Jersey with my Grandparents, and cold winters in Boston" "My feelings as a woman, a student and as a human being surfaced; my kindness is returned to those who helped me accomplish this." "During my four years here, I have found women like me, women unlike me, and myself" "We are all guilty of crime, the great crime of not living life to the fullest. But we are all potentially free. We can stop thinking of what we have failed to do and do whatever lies within our power." "Let's get drunk before Sadie Hawkins" "Friendship — A ten letter word can mean so much, and be so many things: it's a shoulder to cry on — a clown to laugh with — a secret to tell — it's trust — it's love it's happiness, it's hate, it's fun; but most of all it's you my friend." "Morse of course!" "Lauri, lots of hard work and Microcosm deadlines" "If one advances confidentially in the directions of her dreams, and endeavors to live the life which she has imagined, she will meet with success unexpected in common hours." "It's been real! Most of all it's been rewarding with . . . NU as a beginning; Delta Sigma Theta; Pina Coladas — Friday nites; S.A., those special acquaintances, mummy's support; and most of all — determination to hang on" "Tammy, as Darryl to fix me up with a date, bye Winnie, torn between two lovers, Pina Coloda's and Chaka Khan nights, Tammy did you check out his shoes" "I've met many wonderful friends, had some great times with wild memories."
